A Pungent Letter.
We give place this morning to a letter from a Miss Anna Demmon Morris. The article is pungent-bitter, but also readable now, even the feeling entertained champions towards the Douglass seem as if the breach could never be bridged over. The writer is erudite and raises up a number of ruinous points to have been buried out of memory. He holds the challenge of the Douglass in a way that

An Office that Should be
The office of Captain of Police is useless, and should be abolished. It is well known to the character, the nature of the Council, and the conditions of the city. It is a position of honor, and should be required of the Mayor. It is a position of honor, and should be required of the Mayor. It is a position of honor, and should be required of the Mayor.

For two years subsequently, if the Marshal to collect all the would necessarily consume time. This was offered as a reason of the office of Captain. But that pretext no longer collectors, under the supervision of the collector, collect the license more thoroughly and efficiently than could, as the experience of twelve months amply proves.
